Dear Ms. Herman:

Thank you for your letter concerning Mr. Casey's participation in the American Stock Exchange Washington Conference Tuesday, 12 June, at State Department. As discussed on the telephone, Mr. Casey will speak from 9:00 - 9:45 a.m., allowing 25 minutes for remarks and 20 minutes for questions and answers.

We would appreciate any additional information on the Conference, specifically: a tentative agenda (including names of other speakers), the general make up of the audience (size, background, affiliations), and who from the press you expect to be present. We usually discourage T.V. and radio coverage, but we realize this situation is different. Will the press be allowed to ask questions from the floor or will that be limited to the attendees? Mr. Casey does not wish to grant a press interview. I would appreciate knowing who will introduce Mr. Casey and be on the dais with him, and names of people and their affiliations that he will meet that morning.

Could Mr. Casey's speech be taped by the Conference for our historical files? Please let know the type of microphone that will be available. I will appreciate being kept informed of any logistical arrangements that pertain to Mr. Casey's participation.

I look forward to hearing from you in preparation of the event.

Sincerely,

Public Affairs

DCI:

Arthur Levitt, Jr., Chairman of the Board of the American Stock Exchange, has invited you to speak at the Sixth Annual American Stock Exchange (AMEX) Conference. The 1984 Conference, "Washington VI: A Time of Choice," is scheduled for 10-12 June at the Department of State. Although the date is still negotiable, the morning of the 12th would be the preferred time for you to address this group. They suggest a 45-minute talk allowing 25 minutes for remarks and 20 minutes for questions and answers. President Reagan has also been invited to speak sometime during the session, but his appearance is unconfirmed. The audience will be made up of approximately 250 CEO's representing basic manufacturing companies and such "leading edge" industries as health care and telecommunications. They would like you to provide your perspective on national security issues. Last year Vice President George Bush, Treasury Secretary Donald Regan, Senator Howard Baker, and Chairman of the House Tip O'Neill spoke to this group. See brochure opposite.

We understand that Mr. Levitt has been in contact and you have accepted. In developing additional information we discover that:

* The electronic media (national networks and cable TV) will be there as well as the writing media. AMEX should like to keep it open to the press as they have always done in the past 5 years.

* Several of the exchange members are U.K. citizens and may attend.

Does the presence of the media, possibly including foreigners, change your decision to give a speech at this gathering?

Dear Bill:

For the past five years, the American Stock Exchange has sponsored a two-day Washington Conference to bring the chief executives of some of America's fastest growing companies into closer touch with the governmental processes and policies affecting their businesses.

These executives, based in 46 states, represent a broad cross-section of American business--from basic manufacturing to such "leading edge" industries as health care and telecommunications. As the enclosed brochure on the 1983 conference illustrates, many leading figures from the public and private sectors have met with this group, exchanging views and information on issues of national and international importance. I would like to add my voice to the many who consider your views of strong interest to this group.

The 1984 Amex Conference, "Washington VI: A Time of Choice," is scheduled for June 10-12 at the Department of State. Your participation this June, as we focus on the vital choices facing America in this milestone election year, would provide an important perspective on national security issues, while presenting you with an opportunity to communicate directly with company executives who have a profound effect on capital formation, job creation and political activism in their communities.

We will be in touch with your office to try and arrange a mutually convenient time for your participation in Washington VI. I hope you will be able to join us.

Sincerely,

Enclosure
